A related theme of the book is the pattern of capitalist owners pitting different immigrant groups against one another, as a strike-breaking tactic. For example, the book relates that the Order of the Knights of St. Crispin was unsuccessful in persuading Chinese workers to join the 1878 Chicago shoemakers' strike, when the latter were recruited as strikebreakers by shoe factory owners.

The final chapter is no more "biased" than traditional histories - it just has a different "bias." Since we cannot escape bias, awareness of other biases may help us avoid thinking of our own biases as though they were universal. Takaki's scholarship is solid and his academic credentials impressive.

Before reading A Different Mirror I saw our nation's history as the story of the advance of civilization, Civilization being the version of civilization that was developed in England and passed on through our Declaration of Independence and Constitution and the culture of freedom surrounding it. Now I have an awareness of the equal contribution of other streams some already here, and some also from across the seas. And I am deeply aware of the suffering of these peoples in this process.
